Class 10 English - Chapter 3: Two Stories About Flying

🌟 Introduction to the Chapter

This chapter structurally contains two completely separate stories united strictly under one common theme: visually confronting pure inherent fear and triumphing bravely through sheer willpower or mysterious divine guidance.

1. His First Flight (by Liam O' Flaherty)
2. The Black Aeroplane (by Frederick Forsyth)

📌 Story 1: His First Flight

The Core Theme

The story deeply revolves natively around a young, terrified seagull who is completely afraid to jump and fly natively. It profoundly highlights the universal truth that necessity is the absolute mother of invention and conquering pure inner fear fundamentally requires a powerful external push.

Key Plot Points:

- The young seagull safely stays on the ledge while his siblings bravely fly entirely away.
- He securely believes his delicate wings will utterly fail him structurally.

- Natively starved by his tough parents for 24 hours, his hunger physically intensifies.
- His mother creatively flies close to him, actively teasing him purely with a tasty piece of fish but stopping directly just out of reach.
- Maddened powerfully by structural hunger, he dives blindly for the fish, natively falls into the huge empty space, and instinctually spreads his wings securely to fly!

Character of the Mother Seagull

She acts perfectly as a strictly clever, tough-love psychotherapist. She knows natively that words won't work perfectly on fear, but primal hunger will absolutely override it!

⚡ Story 2: The Black Aeroplane

The Core Theme

This story revolves purely around risk-taking, hope intimately guiding a lost soul securely, and the existence of mysterious unexplainable miracles.

Key Plot Points:

- The pilot securely flies his old Dakota airplane from France powerfully to England natively, deeply dreaming of a hearty English breakfast and family safely.
- He violently encounters massive, natively terrifying storm clouds looking like huge black mountains.
- Acting recklessly due directly to his family desire, he flies directly into the brutal storm instead of securely around it.
- His structural compass fails explicitly; his powerful radio instantly dies natively.
- Suddenly, a completely mysterious Black Aeroplane smoothly appears directly with no external lights, completely guiding him safely to a bright airport strictly below!
- Upon perfectly landing securely, the control tower woman strictly informs him famously: there were absolutely no other planes natively in the sky!

> [!NOTE] The mysterious Black Aeroplane natively is explicitly presented as an absolute halucination born dynamically out of the pilot's powerful survival instinct!

❌ Common Mistakes to Avoid

> 1. Confusing Characters: Do not securely mix up the absolute settings. One natively deals purely with a strictly natural biological instinct (the young bird), the other exclusively with a mechanical, human-made survival mystery.
> 2. Ignoring the Irony: The absolute irony natively in "The Black Aeroplane" is securely that the pilot risked his structured life purely for a standard breakfast, heavily endangering himself explicitly due to emotional homesickness.
> 3. The Seagull's "First" Flight: Don't forget that explicitly the family deeply taunted and practically mocked his pure cowardice securely to organically build his psychological desperation.

📝 Quick Revision

The Central Message

Fear intimately exists securely inside the native mind. Whether purely beaten by primal biological hunger successfully or an unexplainable hallucinatory guide native to the human survival spirit precisely, fear strictly vanishes completely the instant the absolute leap is purely taken.

> [!TIP] Both protagonists natively dive headfirst directly into securely dangerous dark zones entirely. Use the phrase explicitly "taking the leap of faith"!
